Parents plead guilty in starvation death of infant son

Bambi Glazebrook and Gregory Robey convicted for their roles in son's death

(Indianapolis, Ind.) Marion County Prosecutor Terry Curry announced today that the mother and father of Phillip Robey have been convicted and sentenced for the death of their infant son in November 2012. On Friday, June 6, Gregory Robey was sentenced to serve six years in the Indiana Department of Correction. Robey pleaded guilty to one count of Neglect of a Dependent (B Felony) for his role in the child's death.

In May, Bambi Glazebrook pleaded guilty to one count OF Neglect of a Dependent (A Felony). She was sentenced on May 30, pursuant to the plea agreement, to 45 years. Thirty years of her sentence is executed time to be served in the Indiana Department of Correction after which she will serve ten years on probation. As set forth in the plea agreement, specific conditions of her probation include no unsupervised contact with any minor child including her own children.

According to the probable cause affidavit, Glazebrook failed to provide proper nurture for the child despite several warnings from concerned neighbors and friends. An autopsy revealed Phillip died of failure to thrive or starvation. Robey was charged for his failure to see that the child was adequately fed or nurtured.

A charge of a crime is merely an accusation, and the defendant is presumed innocent until and unless proven guilty.
